

In Milwaukee Wisconsin, Mark Belling made a comment on a radio station owned by Clear Channel communication that was offensive to an ethnic population of the community. Opposition calling for the firing of Mark Belling has arisen in response to the management of an FCC licensed radio station. A meeting to discuss the offering of an equal forum for the opposition group was canceled by the ownership of Clear Channel communications because it was claimed that news of the negotiation was leaked to the press, objecting to the grass roots media effort in response to Clear Channels use of their FCC license.

Is it possible for the FCC to sponsor negotiations between the contending sides in order to bring better accord to the Milwaukee Community and afford better management of Media outlets within the city of Milwaukee?
